

Yes, you need to establish a National Do-Not-Call list. I would like you to also consider expanding this concept to unsolicited emails. Unsolicited emails are now having a detrimental effect on our business operations:

- we depend on email for critical business communications
- the amount of spam in our inboxes wastes our time, and causes us to sometimes miss important emails from customers
- there is no good technical solution for preventing spam that doesn't also require a lot of our time for it's operation.

To maximize our productivity in the business sector, spam needs to be made illegal.
